Preface

This is a book for every woman. Its object is to save time for the busy woman and to solve problems for the young housewife. It is a simple plan for business administration in the household. It makes it possible for every woman, whether her income be large or small, to keep the daily expenses under her personal control and to state clearly, at the end of each month, how much money she has spent and for what.

Good administration is as valuable in the home, where the family income is spent, as in business, where the family income is made.

As compared with English, French, German and Italian households, there is much unnecessary waste in American homes. Money has been acquired with comparative ease, and, in many cases, is carelessly spent. It is a satisfaction to any woman to feel that the trust imposed upon her by her husband, whose income she spends, is borne faithfully, intelligently and well. This book is written to aid every woman to arrive at this state of mind easily. It is a short cut towards efficiency. It is meant to give to American husbands a square deal.

The efficient housewife must understand her profession. No man could hope to succeed in business who is ignorant of its details. The beginner gives his best thought to understanding what is required to assure success. Housekeeping is woman's business and to succeed she must pursue business methods.

The most important fact for a business man to know is what capital he has and what income he can afford to spend. This knowledge his wife has a right to share. Every woman is as vitally interested in her husband's future as he. If she has the intelligence to spend money wisely she has the wisdom to save money intelligently. A man's wife should be his business partner. This is a fact which few American men are willing to admit. They supply their wives with money in the most generous fashion, but they rarely give them their business confidence. American wives seldom know the amount of their husband's capital or income and so lose the great opportunity for self-development which the feeling of responsibility for the mutual good would produce. The extravagance of many women is the direct result of this lack of understanding and responsibility and is fundamentally the fault of American men. Every woman is entitled to understand her husband's business prospects, which are also hers, and to have at her disposal a regular monthly allowance with the understanding that her part in the family partnership is to spend money wisely and to keep within her income. The women whom I have known who have enjoyed such a frank business relationship with their husbands have responded loyally and intelligently to such responsibility. I believe that all women would do so.

Preface

Household management in America seems to be in an unsettled state.

An English household is carefully adjusted, from the housekeeper, butler, and lady's maid, who are called "upper servants" and have special privileges, to the scullery maid, who stands abashed in the presence of these exalted personages and calls them "Miss" and "Mister." What food and drink are served in the servants' hall is a thing of long usage and its simple wholesomeness is never questioned.

French women are noted for their efficient management of the family income, perhaps partially due to the fact that every woman who marries is possessed of a "dot" and therefore is spending her own money as well as her husband's. The French have taught us the delight of a thoughtfully chosen, perfectly cooked dinner, but we have yet to learn from them the thrift and skill in utilizing little things which is one of their most admirable characteristics.

In Germany the "haus frau" takes the care of her servants seriously and deserves the reputation which she has won for efficiency. It requires a clear head as well as a generous heart to provide for her household. German servants enjoy five inexpensive meals a day: coffee and rolls at seven; bread, cheese or sausage and beer at eleven; the food remaining after the family dinner at two, usually served as a stew of meat and vegetables, which is their most hearty meal of the day; bread and coffee at four; and at eight or later the food remaining from the family supper. German women are thoroughly trained in all pertaining to the household and look upon their capable management as a duty which they owe to the family fortunes.

The Italian method of conducting domestic affairs is the fine art of avoiding unnecessary effort. The butler and maid prepare the simple breakfast of coffee, rolls, and butter, and carry the trays to the family bedrooms. At ten o'clock the chef arrives, having bought and paid for all that he requires for the day for the designated number of persons to be served at luncheon and dinner. At ten P. M. he presents his menus for the following day, with his account of what he has spent for the luncheon and dinner just served. Everything is bought in the small quantities required for the dishes selected, and when he leaves at night his kitchen is empty; all that remains to remind one of his skill is a tall earthen jar filled with olive oil from which he dips what he needs and which never turns rancid. The butler buys the flowers, fruits, and what is required for breakfast, and presents his statement every morning. All is done easily, efficiently and graciously, everything is paid for every day, and the Italian mistress of the household knows, with no effort, just how much she is spending and for what. This is the perfection of household efficiency.

In America enormous fortunes have been made in dizzy haste. Persons of simple tastes and surroundings suddenly find themselves multimillionaires with a palace and a retinue of servants who appear to know much more about managing a household than they do. They take the course of least resistance and allow their servants to manage them, while they uncomplainingly pay the bills. The result is unfair to the servants, who, if they grow unruly under such lax management, as is apt to be the case, are totally unfitted for a less extravagant household. They lose all sense of money value and personal responsibility.

Many American women who have had every advantage which wealth, culture, and travel can give, take upon themselves the responsibilities of a household with no preliminary experience or training. They have not enjoyed the benefit of the generations of common-sense customs of the English women, the carefully enlightened thrift of the French women, the well drilled routine of the German women, or the intelligent facility which the centuries have cultivated in the Italian women. Every household is a law unto itself, from those in which all the ordering is left to extravagant servants and the bills unquestioningly paid, to those in which insufficient attention is given to the servants' food and comfort, and there is constant dissatisfaction and change. We all know homes which answer to each of these descriptions as well as the charming, well-ordered American homes whose sunny atmosphere is an instant assurance that here dwell kindness, order, and a just attention to the comfort and well-being of all. The result of this inequality of domestic arrangement is universal confusion. Nothing is finally settled, as in the European countries mentioned, where generations of one family have lived in the same environment according to the same traditions, and the simple but wholesome arrangements made for the servants are never questioned. There is a stability and restfulness about such well-ordered households which Americans residing there find very grateful. American homes will only arrive at this perfection of organization with its consequent atmosphere of repose when American women unite upon a wise, simple, effective plan of domestic management which is considered representative of American women as a nation.

A descriptive word readily associates itself in one's mind with women of the nationalities mentioned—English common-sense, French thrift, German organization, Italian facility. There is no such word which is universally accepted as descriptive of American women. They are considered charming, witty, adaptable, clever, but they are never spoken of as wise and thrifty managers of household expenses, and the carelessness with which they spend money has become proverbial.

Are American women content to rest under this stigma? Many do not deserve it, but it is applied to all.

Has not the moment arrived when we must accept our responsibilities seriously and crystallize our national tendencies into a national character, in which our women, as a nation, are worthy of the fine achievement of our men, as a nation?

American men lead the world in capable business administration. Their minds have grasped and successfully solved such gigantic problems that they have elevated the word "business" to a level with the most honored professions. Why should American women not emulate American men? Why should we not be honored as they are, for the intelligent business administration of our homes, until we are known, not as extravagant spenders, but as efficient organizers and administrators of our households?

Household efficiency depends upon a carefully planned daily routine. The responsible person should know how much she can spend per month. This will determine the number of servants employed and the style of living. Her two chief sources of outlay will be servants' wages and the food supply for her household. It is in the culinary department that the efficient housewife proves her value. The intelligent buying of food is a science, its arrangement in attractive and varied form is an art.

The plan of housekeeping here given has been used by the writer for many years. It is because several of her friends have asked for a copy and used it successfully that she is encouraged to share it with the public. It is easy to understand and to follow. Its success depends upon the thing necessary to produce success in every business, the faithful performance of a daily duty. The duty is simple and requires only ten or fifteen minutes of time, but the responsible person should not delegate it to others.

At the head of each calendar day in this book are menus for the household dinner and supper and breakfast for the following day. The breakfast is placed last because the daily orders are to be written each morning and include the food to be purchased for the three meals following.

These menus are prepared for the use of persons of widely differing incomes. They are nutritious, economical, and of a pleasing variety. They repeat after three weeks and include the fish, vegetables, and fruits in season in different months of the year. Any family whose income is limited will find them nourishing and attractive and they are suitable for growing children.

In families where few servants are employed it is convenient to give them what remains after the family meals have been served. In such a household the food is simple and there is comparatively little entertaining.

In a more complex household, where the servants are more numerous and frequently prepare and serve luncheons and dinners of several courses, it is well to give them their meals before they are called upon to perform these duties. In many houses the servants breakfast at seven, dine at twelve, and have their supper at half-past five, and their meals are cooked separately. These menus are also intended for use in such households, the responsible person writing in the spaces indicated on the opposite page the menus for her family table for luncheon, dinner, and breakfast for the following day.

Below the household menu is an order list with spaces headed, "meats," "vegetables," "groceries," etc. The daily duty to be performed by the responsible person is this: She writes in the spaces indicated what food she wishes to have served at her table, with the number to be provided for written above. The cook looks over these and the household menus and states how much meat, fish, butter, eggs, groceries, etc., will be required to prepare the coming meals, and the responsible person writes the quantity of each in the allotted space. At the end of the month the bills must correspond with these order lists. In this way she can personally control the expenditures in her household.

There are two vital facts which every efficient housekeeper must know: The quantity of each variety of food necessary comfortably to supply her family, and its cost. A careful housekeeper will add the amounts of sugar, rice, etc., used for three months or more, divide the result by the number of months and arrive at an average. In this way she may prepare a list of groceries, canned fruits, canned vegetables, etc., to be purchased at the beginning of every month. If she entertains many guests the amounts will vary, but she has a good working basis. There are several grades of most foods differing in price, and they should be tried and the particular quality to be used decided. The second vital fact, the price, is easily learned. Food prices vary from season to season, and all tradesmen will supply a list if required, most of them keeping printed forms for this purpose. A price list for the coming month should be sent with each month's bills.

These are the methods of carefully counting the cost in little things which men use in successful business.

At the beginning of each month's menus in this book will be found a list of meats, vegetables, etc., to which the current prices are to be added. At the end of each month's menus is a table of wages paid, with a line for the total amount, also spaces indicated for the house-keeping bills, with a line for the total amount, so that the responsible person may know at a glance just how much has been spent during the past month and for what.

Is this not more satisfactory than having bills come in which one does not feel quite sure are correct, or finding them higher than expected without knowing that the prices of many foods have advanced with the winter season? It can easily be understood that the daily orders with which the monthly bills are to be compared must have been written by the responsible person with her own hand if she is to be able to state positively what is correct in the bills received and what may be an error.

Preface

These household menus do not include chicken, game, or the choicer cuts of beef, all of which are expensive and of no greater nutritive value than the meats selected. They are prepared with the idea that it is as easy to buy exactly the quantity of food required to serve a given number as to buy a large quantity and use it several times until it is finished. These quantities may be increased or decreased in proportion for a greater or smaller number to be served. Careful consideration of just what will be required to prepare the menus for household and dining-room is a task requiring care and intelligence. It is gratifying to find how capably and with what interest a cook will plan these order lists when once they are understood.

Above the luncheon and dinner menus are spaces for the names of guests. If the same guests are entertained frequently it is convenient to know the menus served to them so that they may be varied.

I have found in the International Cook Book, a most useful guide in planning menus, whether simple or elaborate. It is compiled by Filippini, the noted chef of Delmonico's, and its three thousand recipes are arranged in menus for every day of the year with a discernment worthy of this culinary artist.

The young housekeeper may find the following suggestions useful:

It is well to use an ink pencil or fountain pen in writing these menus and order lists, as the book is to be in constant use for a year and lead pencil marks rub and become blurred.

It is economical to buy a side of lamb every Saturday morning at the wholesale price and have it cut up by the butcher, who will keep it in his cold room for several days, if necessary, until needed. The leg and shoulder are used for the servants' Sunday and Tuesday dinners. The nine French chops and loin roast, from which four or five long strips may be carved, may be used in the dining-room. Chops bought separately cost much more per pound.

The art of creating new and tempting dishes from the food remaining from the family table is worthy of the careful consideration of every woman. The remains of roast chicken may be used as a curry with rice and chutney, served in aspic jelly with a salad, with mushrooms in Swedish timbales, or as hashed chicken with a poached egg for breakfast. Endless variety may be given the family table if a little thought is expended upon what is so important a part of daily life.

The household menus are so arranged that if it is necessary to make use of portions of food left from the dining-room the household order may be omitted and the other foods substituted, but it is usually quite practicable so to plan the menus that the dining-room and kitchen menus do not conflict.

The household menus call for bread and butter with breakfast. The hot bread used in the dining-room is to be prepared immediately before the family breakfast, so that it may be light and fresh. A sufficient quantity is to be baked to include the amount required for the kitchen supper, for which it is to be reheated, thus assuring to the servants' table the same variety enjoyed in the dining-room with very little effort on the part of the cook. Milk toast, hot cakes, and popovers must be freshly made for supper.

The cereals are to be cooked in a double boiler for several hours the day before they are to be used and serve the household and dining-room tables. The quantity needed can only be learned by experience, as all do not enjoy this course at breakfast. An average amount for six persons in the kitchen is one third of a pound. Corn meal is listed among the cereals, as it is very nutritious, and, if cooked for several hours the day before with three cups of water and a teaspoonful of salt to one cup of corn meal, instead of the usual two cups to one of a cereal, it is a delicious breakfast food. Hot milk is served with the kitchen coffee and cold milk with the cereals. The milk at the top of the bottle contains cream and is used with cereals or desserts.

The following is a list of the quantities of fish, meats, vegetables and fruits required for six persons in the household menus:

For breakfast, eight eggs and three quarters of a pound of bacon. The number of eggs needed varies with different households and must be determined by experience. One and one half pounds of corned beef for hash, two pounds of sausage, six snappers, one and one half pounds of shredded cod fish for cod fish balls, a two-pound flounder. It is economical to buy the entire flounder, not the filet. In summer the Sunday sausage is replaced by scrambled eggs and bacon.

Quantities of meats and fish required for six persons for dinner and supper in these menus, which repeat after three weeks:

Blue Fish (baked) —5 lbs.	Cod Fish—1½ lbs.
Pot Roast of Beef—5 lbs.	Chipped Beef—1 lb.

These calculations do not include spices, salt, baking powder, etc., as they are used in such small quantities.

The woman is happy who finds housekeeping interesting and home-making a joy. If this book serves in the smallest degree in establishing a simple, useful, practical method of housekeeping for American women, if it aids them in discharging their household duties more easily, quickly, and efficiently, if it liberates their energies so that they may enter into and enjoy the other varied interests which offer such opportunities for self-development and human service for the modern woman, it will have fulfilled its highest destiny.
